13 May 2022

14h - 16h CEST

In recent times, and in the current global context, the need to foster cooperation has never been as urgent as it is today. The 33rd World Cooperative Congress held in December 2021 on the theme “Deepening our Cooperative Identity” demonstrated how the relevance of cooperatives in building a better world lies in the genuine implementation and practice of cooperatives’ universal values and principles. Our movement initiated a consultative process aimed at exploring how well the Statement on the Cooperative Identity is known, understood and if it has stood the test of time since its adoption in 1995.

As a first concrete follow-up of the Congress and looking at what is next, the ICA is organising an online discussion on 13 May 2022 with the following objectives:

- to inform widely, the main takeaways of the reports of the rapporteurs of the 33rd World Cooperative Congress,
- create awareness about the global consultation on the ICA Statement on the Cooperative Identity,
- to thematically bring together cooperators and the ILO focusing on ILO’s standard-setting role, in particular through ILO Promotion of Cooperatives Recommendation, 2002 (n°193).

The webinar is also aimed to initiate your engagement with the ICA in forthcoming discussions on fostering cooperation in this decade, including through events such as the 110th session of the International Labour Conference (May 27 – June 10), the 100^o International Cooperative Day and 28th UN International Day of Cooperatives on July 2, and the 20th Anniversary of ILO Promotion of Cooperatives Recommendation, 2002 (n° 193) on June 20, 2022. The section ‘background information’ below gives more details on these actions

We look forward to a large participation of cooperators from all regions and sectors in the consultations including the webinar and the survey on the cooperative identity.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

I. 33^o World Cooperative Congress

World Cooperative Congresses have been organized since 1895 and can be said to be the fundamental manifestation of the international cooperative movement, which is centered around people's needs and aspiration and their democratic control of their livelihoods, and which remains deeply concerned about the sustainable development of communities. The 33rd World Cooperative Congress was convened in December 2021 around the theme "Deepening our Cooperative Identity" after almost ten years since the last Congress was convened to celebrate the UN International Year of Cooperatives in 2012.

Over 1600 cooperators (1000 onsite and over 600 online) participated in the Congress which was convened by the International Cooperative Alliance and organized in collaboration with the Metropolitan Government of the City of Seoul and the ICA Members in Korea. It was opened by South Korean President Moon Jae-in and graced by ILO Director General Guy Ryder, among other high-level personalities. It was the second time in ICA's 126 years' history that an ICA Congress was convened outside Europe. The theme of this Congress was Deepening our Cooperative Identity, and over 200 experts, practitioners and policy makers took the floor to share their ideas, express concerns and offer solutions while addressing the theme and the four sub-themes: Examining; Strengthening; Committing to; and Living the Cooperative Identity. An equal number of researchers submitted their findings and thematic works during the Congress Research Conference and the 3rd International Forum on Cooperative Law, which were organized immediately before the Congress itself. A truly participative endeavor, the 33rd Congress and its 9 days of thematic events witnessed conversations which were a mix of innovation and ideas, and youthful creativity, precious advice from experienced co-operators, and forward-looking commitments from policy makers.

II. Conclusions of the Congress

The concluding session of the Congress was aired online on 29 December 2021. Madison University Professor Ann Hoyt, and ICA Identity Committee Chairperson Martin Lowery provided a first account of Congress outcomes. Other concluding speeches were contributed by Spanish Deputy Prime Minister Yolanda Díaz, Acting Governor of Gyeonggi province OH Byung-kwon, , Chair of the Korea Cooperative Solidarity CHO Wan-seok, and ICA President Ariel Guarco, while ICA Director General Bruno Roelants indicated the follow-ups envisioned.

The main-messages and common-threads of the discussions at the 33rd Congress were:

- cooperatives need to assume responsibility and heightened commitment in creating ethical value chains.
- cooperatives need to seize the opportunity to foster inclusivity, have deep consideration of our practices and promote equality and equity at all levels for women, youth and marginalized groups.
- now is a period of new opportunities for culturally relevant education and training, and cooperatives need to use technologies to safeguard economic and democratic participation and urgently aim to measure the tangible and intangible impact they have on communities, especially during crises.
- it is fundamental to position cooperatives as agents towards building a stronger capital base; and foster multilateralism and cooperation among cooperatives across national and sectoral borders, particularly towards climate action and strengthen the ICA to that effect.
- and act consistent with the ICA's history of over 100 years of fostering peace, not only in the context of overt violence but importantly in building positive peace around communities of cooperation, integration, reconciliation, and equality.

III. The Road Ahead: a Global Consultation on the Cooperative Identity

The acts of aggression, incrementing threats to our planet, and the precarity of lives of its people old and young, working or not, has never been higher, and the inclusive prosperity of humans is now more uncertain than in the recent past. Therefore, the need to foster cooperation has never been so urgent as it is today. The relevance of the cooperative entrepreneurial model in building a better world lies in the genuine implementation and practice of cooperatives' universal values and principles enshrined in the ICA Statement on the Cooperative Identity, and the first step towards that is to be able to understand them and to be able to adapt to changes, especially the unforeseen and negative.

The ICA Board established the Cooperative Identity Advisory Group comprising 23 cooperative experts and practitioners selected from all over the world, to facilitate the continuation of the reflection on the cooperative identity which began during the 33rd Congress. This group has been working towards developing a plan of action and a preliminary survey, to understand from co-operators worldwide if the Statement on the Cooperative Identity is well known, adequately understood, and appropriately utilized by cooperatives in deepening the cooperative impact of their missions and benefit to communities.

As part of the continuing process of coordinated reflections on the cooperative identity facilitated by the efforts of the global cooperative movement and its Cooperative Identity Advisory Group, the ICA is organizing a first online discussion on the finalized outcomes of the 33rd Congress, as well as on the work of the Cooperative Identity Advisory Group, and the stewardship of the International Labour Organization, the agency of the United Nations with a mandate per Article 12, Paragraph 3 of the ILO Constitution, in promoting, advancing and safeguarding cooperatives and having approved the Promotion of Cooperatives Recommendation, 2002 (n°193) where the Statement on the Cooperative Identity appears in full, thus making it a source of law and policy.

Aim and Objectives of the online discussion

The online discussion aims to inform widely, the main takeaways of the reports of the rapporteurs of the 33rd World Cooperative Congress, as well as create awareness about the global consultation on the ICA Statement on the Cooperative Identity. It also aspires to thematically bring together cooperators and the ILO, ahead of the 110th Session of the International Labour Conference and the UN International Day of Cooperatives. The event will be a precursor to the ICA marking the 20th Anniversary of the Promotion of Cooperatives Recommendation, 2002 (No. 193) adopted on 20 June 2002.
